Check-in

August speaker: Grant Clowers

Grant Clowers, LCSW, Psychotherapy and Clinical Services Supervisor at Carson Tahoe Hospital Behavioral Health Services

- Specializes in mindfulness-based cognitive behavioral therapy such as Dialectical Behavior Therapy and Acceptance and Commitment Therapy.
- Worked in several different mental health areas including community mental health and outpatient private practice.
- Before coming to Carson City 12 years ago, he worked in the Office of Mental Health Research and Training at the University of Kansas in Lawrence.
- Has worked for the last several years on developing programs to help people deal with the fundamental nature of human suffering, which is the way our brain takes part of reality, especially negative and painful parts, and makes it the center of focus.
 - Known as a “negativity bias” this often leads to an understandable but unhelpful sense of reality as being dominated by problems and pain.
 - The bad news of this therapeutic perspective is that our brains are wired for unhappiness.
 - The good news is that there are practices and skills that can help us to get a broader, more realistic, and more positive view of ourselves and our life.

In this series Grant will show that losing a job or career is more like losing life as we know it, and the resulting stress gets people more and more caught in a narrow and negative sense of reality. But, he will also show that with the right skills, this negativity bias can be overcome and people can take even catastrophe as an opportunity for growth and change.

A hand holds a gold-colored picture frame in front of a landscape. The frame is positioned centrally, and the landscape visible through it includes a dirt path, a tall cypress tree, and rolling hills under a clear sky. The background outside the frame is a blurred continuation of the same landscape.
